

LEGAL PRACTICE MANAGEMENT SOLUTION SERIES # 5

MANAGING YOUR RISK

Imagine being the team that launches the next space capsule from Cape Canaveral.

Months, if not years, have gone into the planning of the mission. There are checks and balances implemented on information received from sensors and early warning signals so that the mission can be adjusted and tweaked to ensure its success.

Like with your motor vehicle, an airplane, or a space rocket, would a fuel indicator provide sufficient information to you that all is not well?

What if that fuel indicator tells you that you can fly to the moon and back on your tank? Surely a speedometer or an altimeter is important too?

PROBLEM

Why would you not have these early warning indicators present themselves every day for your practice?

Is the trip from home to the office just a risk you are willing to bear? Hoping that the daily grind will pay off just because you showed up?

You need to take heed of these signals, monitor and manage them on the information provided to you.

Take corrective action.

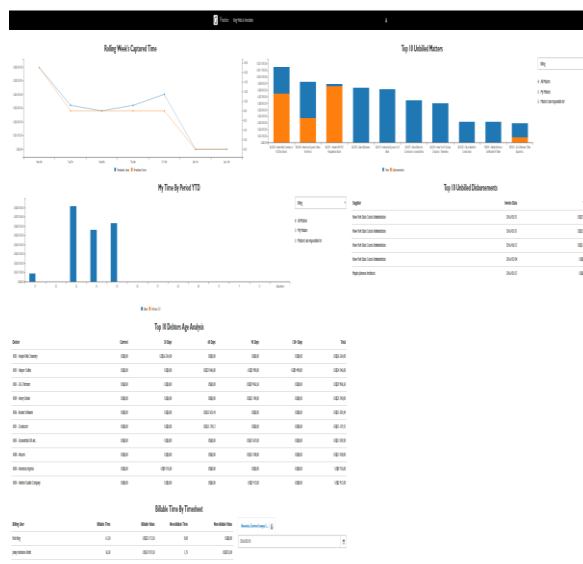

The problem for legal practices is that with disconnected systems - a separate time and billing system from your accounting system, you are unable to see this information until the month end reports are out.
